Yosemite Conservancy Launches Diversity-Focused Protect Your Wild Campaign

“We want to remind people that they are an integral part of nature, not separate from it.”

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK (April 23, 2024) — Yosemite Conservancy launched an initiative to engage Millennials and Gen Z in outdoor conservation during this National Park Week. Protect Your Wild challenges people to consider how they protect the wild inside of themselves — and out in the world.

“We want to help get more bodies of all shapes, sizes, skin tones, and abilities into the outdoors,” said Kimiko Love Martinez, Yosemite Conservancy’s Chief Marketing & Communications Officer. “Public lands are for everyone. And we want to support people in reconnecting with that sense of connectedness to the Earth; to remind people that they are an integral part of nature, not separate from it.”

Many organizations, influencers, and individuals have been working to diversify the outdoors, including Outdoor Afro, Pride Outside, Latino Outdoors, the Diversify Outdoors collective, and many more. In doing so, they’re also addressing the host of reasons for the lack of inclusivity in outdoor spaces — ranging from the tight-knit, sometimes-exclusionary cultures in climbing, camping, and hiking to cultural, economic, and accessibility barriers; lack of access to transportation, education about nature, representation in outdoor activities and spaces, and consideration for varying identities; limited exposure to outdoor activities; historical exclusion; and more.

Visitors to national parks — and Yosemite in particular — already include a wide range of ages, ethnicities, socio-economic statuses, and more.

To amplify the Protect Your Wild campaign, Yosemite Conservancy has partnered with influential voices in the #DiversifyOutdoors movement to share how they protect the wild in themselves and in their community, including Amanda Capable, founder of EveryBODY on Trails; Luz Lituma, co-founder of Latinx Hikers; Jose Gonzalez, founder of Latino Outdoors; Brittany Leavitt, CEO of Brown Girls Climb and an Outdoor Afro alumni, Ambreen Tariq of Brown People Camping; Zoe Peterson and Kelby Jecker of @the_AdventureAddicts, and more.

An interactive “What’s Your Outdoor Personality Type?” quiz is a staple of the campaign, with personalized tips on how to “Protect Your Wild” for each personality type — ranging from Weekend Warriors to Forest Bathes, History Buffs to Flora and Fauna Lovers, and more.

“We want you to protect the wild around you — and in you,” Love Martinez said. “When you build a love for self and see yourself as part of nature and wild places, you want to protect it.”
